OFFICERS MUSTER, LIT SOLDIERS ROLE ARMED

About $140,000 for military works to build up defense of Madrid.

Seizure of transatlantic shipping companies.

Seizure of all mining industries.

Assumption of control of all electric power plants.

Seizure of hundreds of officers of the army and navy, hundreds of government workers and scores of diplomats accused of rightist sympathies or actual participation in the revolt.

OUTS OFFICERS

The decree appointing soldiers was expected to put the entire army in the command of men from the ranks whose loyalty to the republic could not be doubted. The government thus would be enabled to dismiss practically all officers of the army.

Each decree was made effective today.

Scores of rightists suspected of implication in the revolt were arrested early today throughout the capital. All Madrid's streets including the women's prison and police headquarters, were filled to capacity.

Management of the street car system of Madrid was handed over to workmen by the city administration.

A workers' committee announced immediately that "we want the cooperation of the people. We don't want anyone to travel without papers."

The government claimed the rebels of Madrid were in a desperate situation and that the population was fleeing the countryside to avoid starvation.

SURE OF VICTORY

The government was more confident than ever of ultimate victory today as the civil war entered its fourth week.

The government was estimated to have received more than 100,000 reports from all fronts indicating operations were being carried out with success.

"We admit the situation is particularly complicated," a statement said, "but there can now be no doubt as to the result of the struggle between Democratic freedom and military slavery."

Today there was a lull in activity in the Sierra north of Madrid, where Spanish planes attacked almost from outbreak of the revolt.

Local forces were busy fighting their positions. No serious fighting was expected here today.

Reformers were sent to San Sebastian to crush any rebel attempt to overthrow the city.

The government was especially pleased with progress of Legation fighting. Legation forces, rebel stronghold in the northeast.

Pigs in Maine

By George E. Phair

In dear old Maine a ruin stands
That once was Quoddy Dam
Where workmen toiled with willing hands
Until they had to scam.
And now the pigs raise novel brands
Of sausages and ham.

With Raw Deal millions tossed away
To founder in the sea,
The pigs grow fat beside the bay
On food of high degree.
They eat five hundred pies a day
And snort in pigish glee.

Contented pigs, a happy lot,
They frolic on the beach,
Devouring pies of apricot,
Of apple, quince and peach.
Rhubarb and custard, cold or hot,
Are all within their reach.

And when the pigs are turned to meat
There is a feast in store.
A slice of ham will be so sweet
The kids will cry for more
And hang around with lagging feet
Outside the kitchen door.

A meat shop will be bright and gay
In happy days to come.
The butcher, as he steps to weigh
A porkchop with his thumb,
Will wear a honeyed smile and say:
"What flavor—peach or plum?"

Although the Raw Deal cost is high
It is not all in vain.
The tourist as he motors by
In sunshine or in rain
Will hear the peddler's merry cry:
"Sweet redhots ... fresh from Maine."

KING on Vacation HOP

EDWARD OFF TO ADRIATIC

London, Aug. 8 (AP)—Flashed by the new official "Captain of the King's Flight," King Edward took off today from Heathrow Airfield for Calais, France, for the start of his month's holiday with a party of friends on the steam yacht Nahlin.

His Majesty, incognito as the Duke of Lancaster, established a precedent as the first British King to fly abroad.

He will board the Nahlin somewhere in the Adriatic Sea. The exact route of the cruise was kept a closely guarded secret.

The crew of 50 on the yacht was picked up and new uniforms from caps to shoes. They were pledged to secrecy and promised not to breathe a word to anybody, anywhere, about the royal holiday.

On the $13,000 boat, the King is expected to sail leisurely through the lovely, fabled islands of the Dalmatian archipelago off the coast of Yugoslavia.

Edward earlier cancelled his proposed visit to the Chesapeake Bay. Two British destroyers will accompany the royal party, which will be absent from England about a month.

Quits Big Bed

The King had the yacht's library converted into his own cabin. It was located and spacious but when he visited the Nahlin at Southampton he found a big limping waiter bedstead installed.

He objected to the ship and had a simple divan-bed substituted. Edward earlier cancelled his proposed visit to the Chesapeake Bay.

Film Romeos Shudder Over Mary's Diary

GLAMOROUS MARY ASTOR'S NEWEST POSE

TEN BATTLE LOVE EXPOSE

Los Angeles, Aug. 8 (US)—Hollywood's "Yes, but" Romeo, as listed in Mary Astor's diary rating, were reported to have banded together in a "safety first" bid to suppress publication of the 187-page "misstep book," which threatens the careers of some of the top-ranking celebrities of fandom.

The quaking Casanovas, fearing revelation of their names in the Astor "thrill omnibus," were said to have joined forces to raise a settlement fund, in an attempt to persuade Mary's fighting ex-husband, Dr. Franklin Thorpe, to withhold the diary he plans to present on court Monday, at resumption of the battle to retain custody of his little daughter, Marilyn.

The reported action of the former friends of Miss Astor, seeking to avoid the spotlight which already has singled out Frankfort, Romeo, S. Kaufman as an important contender in the scoring of charm, followed announcement of a hands-off policy by the office of Will H. Hays, movie czar.

Both Defiant

But when the Hays office announced no intention to interfere, the fearful social lions of the film colony, remembering past snafus from Miss Astor, decided it was high time to form a "great lovers' protective society," according to the rumor that has all Hollywood by the ears.

In the face of frantic pleas for an amulet, both Miss Astor and Dr. Thorpe maintained an attitude of stony defiance, and it appeared that the fireworks would be resumed as scheduled on Monday.

At a preliminary skirmish, Miss Astor's attorney, Roland Rich Woolley, was a postponement until Monday of her scheduled appearance today to give a deposition in her plea for an amendment of her marriage to Thorpe.

George S. Kaufman, the "great lover" rated second in Mary Astor's diary box scores, was discovered today hiding in the home of his friend and collaborator, Miss Hart.

Pens New Diary

John Barrymore today was definitely headed toward the seclusion of the sensational court fight. Attorney Aaron Sapiro, representing the screen "Don Juan," announced he had no objection to Barrymore accepting service of a subpoena when he leaves the sunbather, where he has been recuperating from a heart ailment.

At the same time it was learned that the suborned actress, undaunted by the loss of her fiancé,

FOLKS LAUGH AS TRAIN CUTS WOMAN IN TWO

By ARNE STROM

ARTICLE TWENTY

It was quite impossible to get reserved seats in the train for Provincetown. That very evening we got ordinary tickets for the journey by way of Litch.

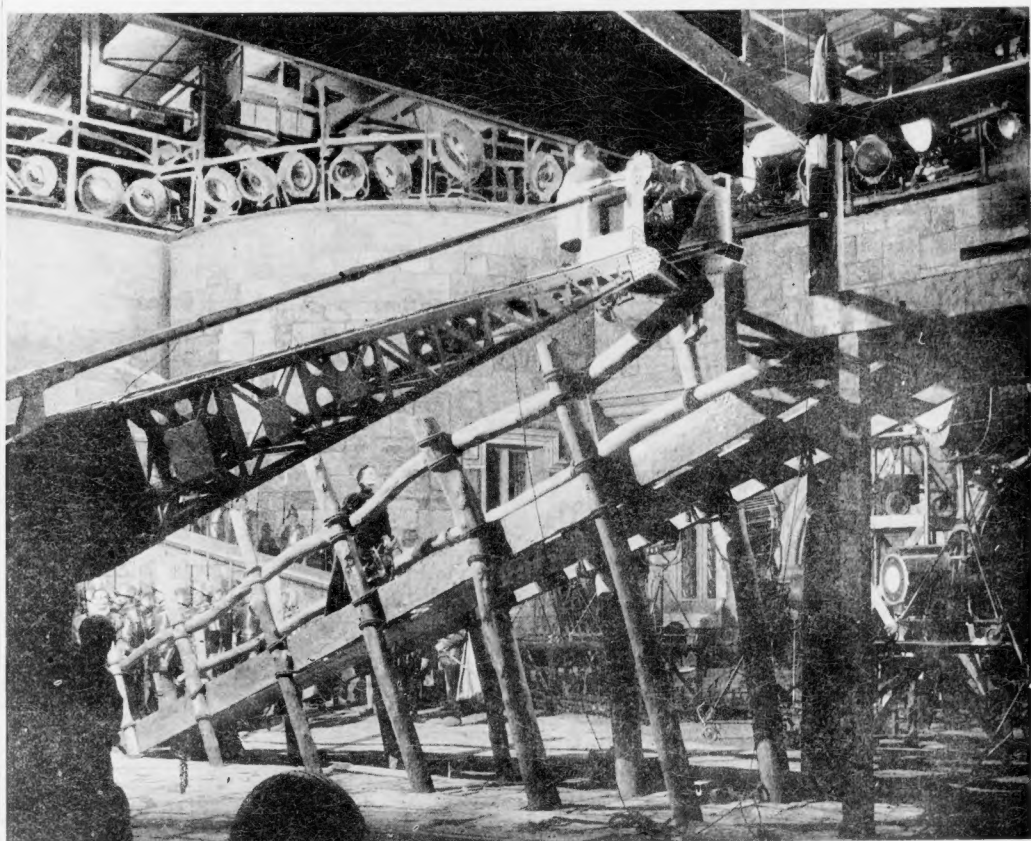

The train had just started off when a terrible scream from a woman's seat near our under our carriage. The scream gradually died down in a pitiful. The train stopped again and all was quiet. The officers had rushed out. I sat in my back and listened eagerly.

Just under my window I heard some men talking and laughing with calm unconcerned faces. Then a whistle sounded, there was an answering whistle from the engine, and the train slowly began moving again.

The door was opened and the other train came. The men were not so calm. They were all looking at each other with expressions of what I called "astonishment." I explained to them what had happened to the woman. They all looked at each other with expressions of what I called "astonishment."

Hungry Children

As time passed things all the more of the train. The men were not so calm. They were all looking at each other with expressions of what I called "astonishment." I explained to them what had happened to the woman. They all looked at each other with expressions of what I called "astonishment."

One of the most dramatic scenes ever filmed for a motion picture is the finale of RKO Radio's "Mary of Scotland," in which Katharine Hepburn and Fredric March are co-starred. This shot of "movies in the making" shows Mary Stuart's ascent to the block, the victim of Queen Elizabeth's intrigue. At the left the camera, high over the set in the camera crane, is

John Ford, winner of this year's academy award for outstanding directorial work, who megaphoned the picture, which has been acclaimed as one of the year's best films.

She's Impatient

So that time it again—and again—she with the double hand to mount the frightened horse. Katharine Hepburn grew impatient. "Let me ride him," she said, "as I wanted to in the first place."

"You'll never make it, Kate," said Ford. "Will you bet on it?" she demanded.

Ford was right. So Katharine was again in the top of the place. "Gentle!" said Ford. "Well take it."

"Uncle, Give Us Bread"

Arne Strom is a Danish poultry expert, who had lived in Canada and the United States. He was engaged by the Soviet government to

Accompanied by his wife and child, Mr. Strom went to Soviet Russia in 1925. He stayed in the country for a year, and he traveled widely throughout the country.

Everywhere he went in Russia he heard the cry from a starving and miserable people, "Uncle, give us bread!" He returned to Denmark utterly disillusioned.

With the pitiable cry of the starving millions, "Uncle, Give Us Bread," as the title, Mr. Strom has published the record of his experiences.

The book was translated from Danish and issued in England in the spring of 1926.

"Uncle, Give Us Bread" is an undoubted and unique picture of life under the Soviet regime. It is suffused with a profound love for the helpless Russian people, ground down by a merciless dictatorship.

Mr. Strom was watching the distribution of food and the suffering of the children. He remained in the country for a year, and he traveled widely throughout the country.

In 1925, I decided, I would leave my home in Denmark and go to Russia. I was not alone. I was with my wife and child. I was with my wife and child. I was with my wife and child.

What a time I had in giving my first lesson in the world of the starving. I was not alone. I was with my wife and child. I was with my wife and child. I was with my wife and child.

I had got a clear picture of the world of the starving. I was not alone. I was with my wife and child. I was with my wife and child. I was with my wife and child.

Red Defender

I have never been particularly interested in politics, and many years spent in America had not developed in me a great enthusiasm for the particular doctrine of socialism worshipped over there, but although there was some unemployment here, there was also plenty of good food and other necessities of life, even in the poorest workers' districts, and that with us unemployment had not caused such misery and poverty as I had seen here in Russia.

He took my words almost as a personal insult, and became angry. At last I could stand no more, and my little family started crying. The man who was with me, a young German, was difficult to understand.

The first object that caught my eye was a woman. She was a young woman, and she was very beautiful. She was very beautiful. She was very beautiful.

My boy was quite ill, but my wife had been ill partly from the unendurable heat, as the working was worn and no new material was to hand. The food also was partly responsible for her illness.

Finally, and black bread, on salt the village had run out of salt, no sugar, no margarine or butter—like as not a diet on which a West European can keep well. My wife and boy had had three eggs a day between them, but they were not trained to be satisfied with the percentage of fat contained in 1 1/2 eggs a day. Potatoes were not to be had.

Then we opened the packing, entered her little day of corn, and seeing the many good things. How hungry they were. Poor dear! How hungry they were. Poor dear! How hungry they were. Poor dear!

ADVICE on LOVE and MARRIAGE by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Only Magician Can Change Woman

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

It's all or nothing with women. She positively will not compromise. There are no halfway in her behavior, no compromise paths or dead-end streets.

Straight ahead—this woman's way. And, once on her chosen path, she goes straight on, down that way.

Mrs. Jones is religious. Every service finds her in church. With her, daily and Sunday worship is a duty. Each time she would be perfectly able to slink out, duty.

Mrs. Smith, not religious at all, goes to church, not for duty, but for the social life. She goes to church to see the people she knows, and to hear the music.

Mrs. Jones is a perfectionist. She has a high standard of living. She is a social leader. She is a woman of many talents.

Mrs. Smith is a practical woman. She is a good mother. She is a good wife. She is a good friend.

Coronation Glory Echoed in Congress Dance Winner

YOU'LL THINK of long-stemmed pink roses... of thin, fragrant tea and golden scones and ancient silver... you'll think of lots of things that mean England to you when you see this dance floor.

For one thing, there is its color—an English favorite of the amaretto-peacock blue. Its combination is original—old blue velvet on faillite tulle of the fascinating brilliant peacock shade.

Then there is something so very "Lady Sylvia" about the handings on the hem, about the high-ruffled band under the chin, and the long picture lines at wrists. It is a Fashion Congress selection, modeled by Miss Dorothy Walters.

For shopping information on the faillite-tulle dance frock, which is moderately priced, phone Annice Brink, Fashion Editor, Liberty 9000, or write her at the Boston Evening American.

FLOYD GIBBONS' PAGE OF THRILLS AND MYSTERY

Men Without Faces!

Reader Meets Horrible Adventure in Land of Living Dead

By FLOYD GIBBONS

HELLO EVERYBODY:

Here, boys and girls, is a tale of sheer terror. It's from Persia Barnes of Larchmont, N. Y., and it happened to her in 1917, at Caloin, the U. S. Government labor colony in the Philippines.

All her life, Persia had thought that night was the only thing in the world she was afraid of. That scared her stiff. Whenever she got in a tall building, or on a cliff, or any place that was more than 20 or 30 feet from all terra firma, she'd have in fight back a crazy impulse to jump. Any sort of elevation made her go weak in the knees. She sort of reasoned that nothing else in the world could frighten her half as much as having a lot of distance between her and the ground.

But one day she discovered something that terrified her even more. And it was just her luck then, to have her two pet fears gang up on her.

Persia went to Caloin in 1917, as the wife of one of the two doctors in charge of the settlement. The first week was interesting. Once the novelty wore off, though, she began to get bored, and one day, while the doctors were busy in the hospital, she started off on a walk to explore the interior of the island.

She picked up a long stick and started walking along a path that circled the hill just back of the colony. She had walked about an hour, climbing up and up, when suddenly she saw a man blocking her way, and knew she was face to face with something quite horrible than all the high, precipitous places in the world.

Persia says that man's face—or rather ABSENCE of face—is just as vivid in her mind as it was the last afternoon when she first saw it. "And it wasn't yesterday that this happened either," she says.

He was tall, strong, apparently healthy. But his face was—well, but the eyes and forehead. The rest was just a mass of gangrene that had no sensation. Across his shoulders was a kind of torn, and suddenly my feet took wings. I ducked beneath the wind he carried and on past him as fast as my feet and strength could bear me."

But Persia was not in a fine lot. That night, she had the most terrible nightmare of her whole life. The next morning, at the edge of a steep, narrow gorge. Down at the bottom ran a stream, and the water was so hot that it was boiling. Persia was so scared that she ran up the gorge, and found a bridge made of two medium-sized logs, with smooth on top.

She started to go back. She didn't know the entrance to the gorge, but she was so scared that she ran up the gorge, and found a bridge made of two medium-sized logs, with smooth on top.

It wasn't long, he says, that midway across it know I was slipping. I couldn't go on. I simply stood there looking at the river and getting drier. Far below me I heard people chattering and shouting to me. A group of lepers were washing their clothes in the river and they were so startled at my appearance that they seemed like a family of monkeys."

"Then, suddenly, Persia had a discovery that turned her back to water. A man had been climbing up the side. She saw the other side of the log and saw what she is not yet sure who she realized that he was ANOTHER LEPER."

"One of his arms," she says, "was completely gone. The other arm he held toward me. The hand was gone, his wrist was a lump of green and yellow rotten flesh. I almost committed suicide then, but not by jumping. I tried to tell him I was no leper—that it would mean worse than death to me to touch his gangrenous arm. He kept on advancing, smiling, friendly. Then, at my wrist, I raised one stick to strike him."

"His expression changed when he saw my intention. He crumpled a little toward me, his eyes blazing. If I had ever hit him, those people would have killed me, but whatever it is that takes care of little girls came to my rescue. At that moment I fell and my stick went hurtling down into the water. I fell, but I didn't go completely over. Instead I struggled the log."

Persia was lying flat on the log, her head back. She could see the other side of the log and saw what she is not yet sure who she realized that he was ANOTHER LEPER."

Floyd Gibbons will pay good money for good TRUE adventure stories. Hundreds of people in Boston and nearby towns have received one-dollar and hundred-dollar bills for their yarns, and there's no reason why you can't do the same, for, as Floyd says, everybody has had at least one adventure. Fred A. Carlson of 55 Deaconess road, Boston, won one hundred and ten dollars for the story of his life's biggest moment, and you can do the same. For further details, see the box at the right side of the page.

But Terry's manner of the Giants, was not as method as to ask, "Are the Giants still in the league?" That was in the Spring of 1961. With the Giants pressing the Giants to the place, the closing days of the year 1961. Terry's club had the players as opponents in a four game series.

"Are the Dark Eyes still in the form?" exclaimed the Fairy Queen. "I would like to see a copy written." "Let us recast them," answered the demon and then Fairy and his guests departed at once.

"Are the Dark Eyes still in the form?" became the battle cry of the men of Casar Steel.

BOSTON Adding Water SUPPLY
Boston will never be likely to face a water supply shortage, in the opinion of Karl E. Kerosian, engineer, who provides information about past and future water supply. The present source is the Quabbin Reservoir in the Swift River Valley.

"Recent Social Trends" by R. F. Steiner, estimates the annual cost of recreation to the average American at between 10 and 12 per cent of his yearly income. The study bases its estimate on the average expenditures for recreation during the period 1928-1930. The average cost of recreation per year during the three-year period 1928-1930 was $16,000,000. This was equivalent to about 13 per cent of the average yearly national income during the same period. During the depression every body's income was reduced and recreation expenditures declined. However, it is estimated that the relationship between national income and expenditures for recreation remained the same during the depression as in the period 1928-1930. The chart shows the distribution of the average annual cost of recreation during the period 1928-1930.

Auto Trailers Not Behind
One of the country's newest up-and-coming industries, the business of making and selling automobile trailers is today receiving the attention not only of the general public but also of the automobile manufacturers. Since auto trailers are naturally suited to trailer production, it seems like an ideal arrangement. Authorities here also point to the fact that in predicting a great future for trailers, much to the disgust of real estate men, it is not unusual, therefore, to find auto makers warning their scope of operations. There is no doubt the latest to join the ranks, with plans to build trailers in three sizes.

Plymouth Plans Topmost Output
The Plymouth Division of Chrysler Corporation has a production schedule for August and to exceed the "mechanical capacity" of the plant, it was learned in reliable quarters. Plymouth plans to build something approaching 60,000 units this month. To accomplish this, every facility is being pressed day and night to yield the utmost. The remarkable highlight of the program is that, in other instances, motorcar makers are either slowing down output or almost completely shut down in preparation for 1937 models.

Rail Revenues Up 25% in July
July railroad operating revenues, it now appears, will exceed the previous record of $2,500,000,000 and in the preceding month and equal the $2,400,000,000 of last July. At such a level, the July revenues would be around 25 per cent above the record of July, 1935, contrasted with a gain of 17 1/2 per cent in June over the same month of 1935.

THREAT In Japanese COTTONS INDUSTRIES MUST BE SUPPORTED
Possible conditions, which are brought out by Frank L. Noid, president of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, should arouse the interest of consumers and business people alike. The competitive advantage which enables the Japanese cotton manufacturer to invade the American domestic market is based almost entirely on the fact that the Japanese textile worker is paid a lower wage scale. The threat, carried by Japanese cotton goods to the American manufacturer and the American worker is the threat of the cheap labor and the lower living standard of the Orient. The Japanese textile worker is paid about 28 cents a day, less than the hourly wage of the American textile worker. If an unshaken New England were to resume operations employing Japanese textile workers, there would be an immediate and widespread outcry against this assault on the American standard of living.

New METHODS Essential

By LEWIS H. BROWN
President, John Manville Corp.
Copyright, 1936, by Universal Service

New York, Aug. 8.—As long as the average man has only a permanent mortgage for a roof over his head, home ownership is not a safe venture. Shelter is a primary need for all alike, poor or rich, and undisturbed possession of adequate shelter can do more than any one thing to make us happy, stable and independent.

During the next few years we will need millions of new homes. We need many of them today to replace the ramshackle and obsolete buildings which mar the countryside and deface our city streets, which breed criminals, foment unrest and spread disease. We need them to provide work for the unemployed and to provide decent homes for our citizens.

Eventually, these homes will be needed in great numbers today to decide whether we wish to avoid the past mistakes from which we are still suffering and provide a new type of home construction soundly financed, or whether we prefer to go back to our old ways and lay the foundation for another disastrous collapse at some future time.

Among the reasons for the collapse there are three that stand out conspicuously: first, the standard unimproved mortgage, inadequate construction standards and the fact that too many prospective home owners build houses beyond their means.

The second tradition will also stand out as a conspicuous factor in the permanent mortgage must be scrapped because it is financially unsound and socially dangerous.

It has become apparent that many houses erected in the last 15 or 20 years, have poorly built. House building had been too long a speculative enterprise. Block after block of dwellings monotonously similar in appearance were produced, and the result was that many of them have come close to a few years.

Today's trend of evidence that this dreary picture is brightening is that construction methods have developed new and modern materials and equipment available to the home owner.

The danger of buying a home and in assuming obligations beyond the financial means of the prospective owner are the two most serious factors.

Today the average man, in seeking a home, should expect and get the following type of service from the mortgage company:

- 1-To be able to purchase his home on a cash basis.
- 2-To have a mortgage company that has a sound character as a mortgage company.
- 3-To know in advance all the obligations he is expected to meet in the future, in order that he may pay for them so that an unexpected demand for the principal will not jeopardize the security of his ownership.
- 4-That the down payment will be kept as small as is necessary to safeguard the mortgage against fluctuations in value.
- 5-That the mortgage be amortized on a single long-term transaction basis, thereby paid out in income with a consequent reduction in renewal charges, interest and commissions.
- 6-Some automatic protection on the site or part of the home so that it can be commensurate with his income. For instance, the mortgagee should be able to sell the house for the price of the mortgage.
- 7-That the mortgage be insured against fire and theft.
- 8-That the mortgage be insured against fire and theft.
- 9-That the mortgage be insured against fire and theft.
- 10-A certificate of inspection in writing that the house is in accordance with standard specifications and that the mortgage is in accordance with the mortgage company's policy.
